

Michael Riis-Christianson, aka Mike Turkki, is an award-winning journalist who started writing professionally as a teenager in 1978. Since then, his work has appeared in the Vancouver Sun, Lakes District News, Gulf Islands Driftwood, and several pieces of unaddressed ad mail. In addition to writing, he enjoys traveling, exploring abandoned buildings, taking photographs, and playing hockey with other people his age. He lives in Burns Lake, British Columbia, with his wife Sashka and their dog Roxi, where he is employed as an exhibit at the Lakes District Museum. I Heard the Turkki Call My Name is his second book. His first, History Matters: Stories and Photographs from the Archives of the Lakes District Museum, was published in 2022 and nominated for the British Columbia Historical Federation's historical writing award.
